

Flamingo chicks are gray and fluffy when they hatch. Both mother and father make a special red liquid inside their bodies called "crop milk." Crop milk gets its color from the tiny pink water creatures and algae that flamingos eat. It takes years for a chick to turn pink!

